The Helsinki Initiative was launched in April 2019 to promote the diversity and value of multilingualism in scholarly communication: www.helsinki-initiative.org. As the European University Association states in support of the initiative, “balanced multilingualism is particularly relevant for Europe, as its research is characterised by geographic, cultural and linguistic diversity and the common principle of excellence”. The purpose of the Helsinki Initiative workshop is to provide a common international platform for policy-makers, research performing and funding organisations, scholarly publishers, open access communities and research libraries, as well as researchers and science journalists to discuss concrete implementation plans for the Helsinki Initiative.
